STYLE

Black long coat
(shop front, evening)

Olive parka
(by the river, at night)

Light jacket
(amusement park, at sunset)

The same white shirt looks different on everyone: sleeves rolled or not, how many buttons done up, what it's worn with. That difference is style. I look at what a person chose, what they left out, and what they made stand out. A good space starts the same way.

Good style isn't about trends. It suits the person, it stays consistent, and it feels comfortable. You can recognize that person from across the street. A good space is the same: you know where you are the moment you walk in.

Anyone can buy the clothes.
(Only the person can make the style.)

Black, olive, beige and grey. Short, neat hair; horn-rimmed glasses or sunglasses; an oversized long coat with wide trousers; a vintage watch. Diptyque, Jo Malone, Burberry. I match my hair, the tone of my clothes and the mood of my scent to the place I'm going that day.

PICTURE

color
(a food truck, at dusk)

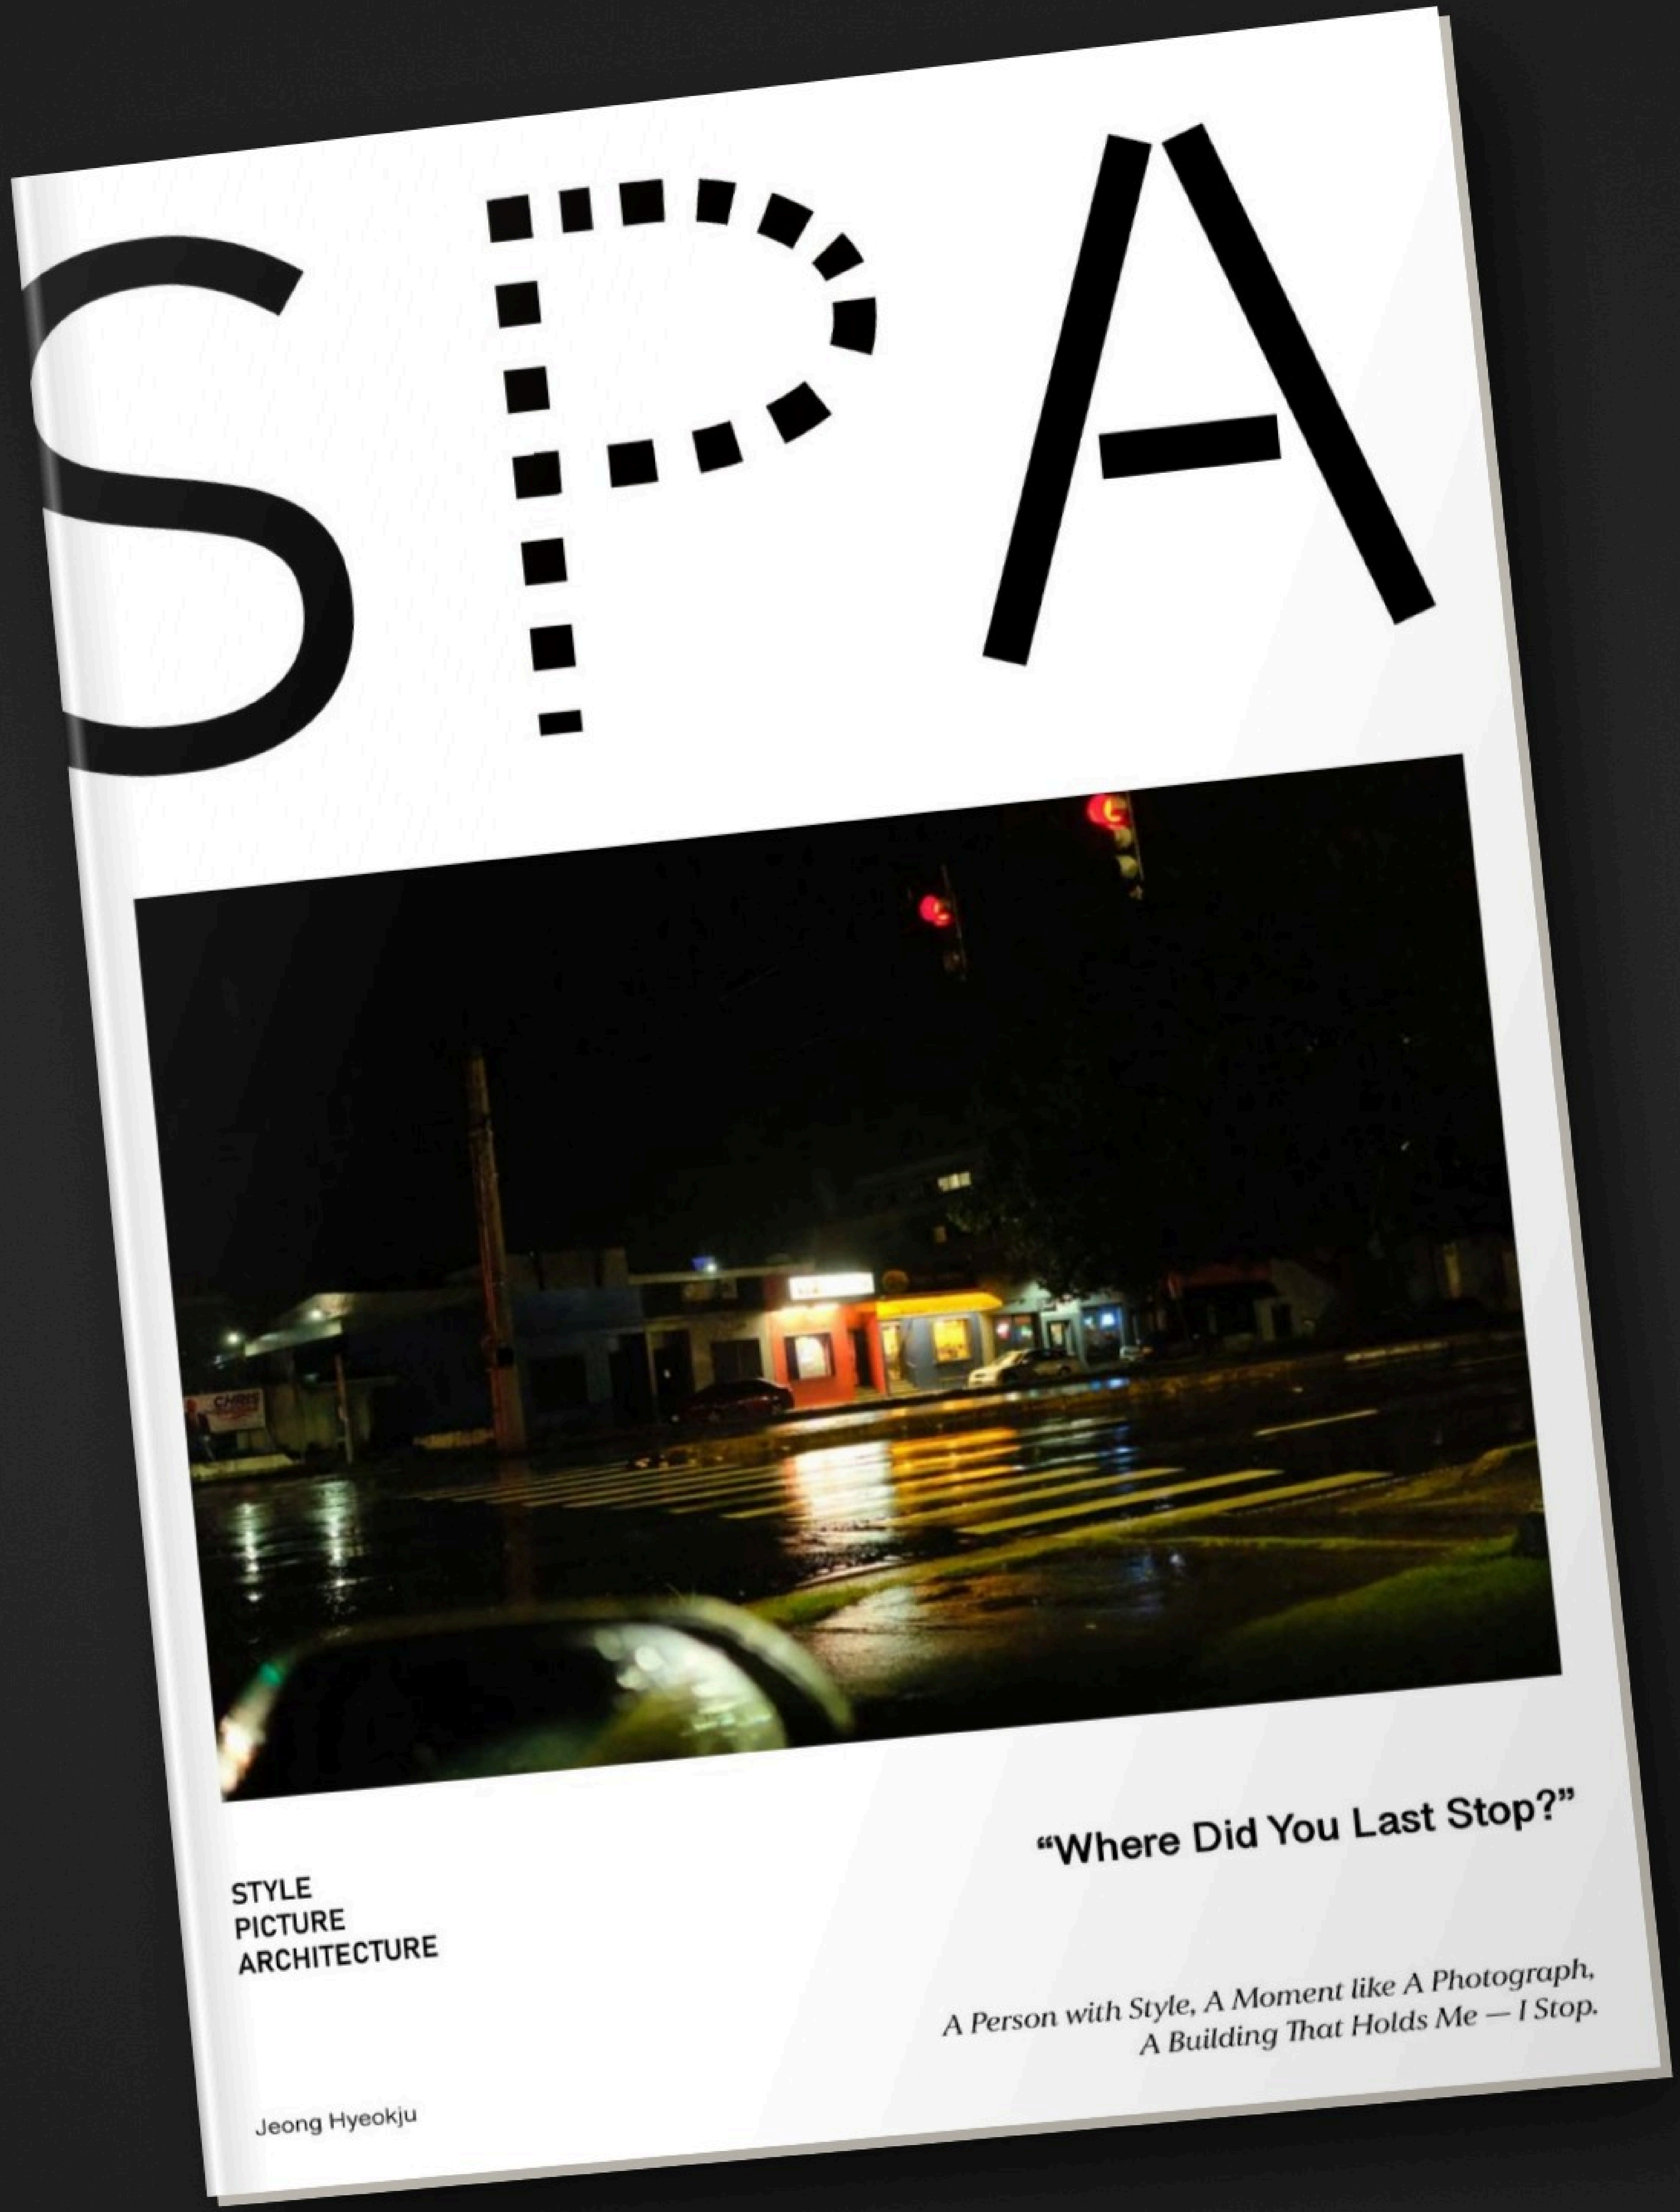
Why do I take pictures?
With a camera in hand, I notice what I usually walk past: the color of a wall, the direction of the light, where people stand. As I shoot, I keep watching, and even an ordinary street starts to tell a story. Making a space works the same way. A good space starts with seeing

Bulbs
(a rooftop bar, at night)

Sprout
(on the sand)

p. 7-8

I stop for people whose style is their own.
I stop for people whose style is their own.



SPA

“Where Did You Last Stop?”

STYLE
PICTURE
ARCHITECTURE

A Person with Style, A Moment like A Photograph,
A Building That Holds Me — I Stop.

Jeong Hyeokju

ARCHITECTURE

RENDER + PHOTOSHOP

Stacked rooms over an open plaza
(Architectural Design Studio, 4-1 Semester)

(003)

Architecture is never just a background: it quietly decides how people walk, where they stop, and what they remember. In this project, I stacked rooms like shifted boxes and let the stairs show through the glass. At its foot, an open plaza lets people cross, pause by the water, and stay a while. A good building holds people, and brings them back again.
So my third story is about architecture.

p. 15-16

Architectural Project_Personal

WEB DESIGN

Grid systems are widely used in graphic design, web design, and user interface (UI) design. In print, grids help maintain alignment across pages, while in digital products they ensure layouts adapt smoothly to different screen sizes.

A good screen, like a good style, starts with choosing what to show and what to leave out. DAILY LookBook is a site that collects everyday outfits: see how others dress each day, browse by style, and find the piece you liked.

manuscript grids
(single-column layouts)

manuscript grids
(single-column layouts)

p. 3-4

From drawing to model

HAND-MADE MODEL

A drawing shows a space. A model lets me step into it. I cut, stack and light each one by hand, until I can see where people will stop.

01 Light through the gaps
(concept model · see p. 20)
02–03 House interiors
(housing project · kitchen, living room)
04 N Artist's House models
(made as an intern at a.co.lab)
05 Extension of Chateau
(annex project · see p.18)

p. 21-22

Architectural Studio – Internship